1. There is a large concentration of troops in the area surrounding Volary (N49/Q55).* Empty barns and houses have been confiscated for troop billets, and in some cases occupied houses have been evacuated to accomodate troops. A military command post, guarded on a 24-hour basis, is located on an evacuated farm opposite the Volary railroad station. Materiel, weapons and ammunition are brought into the area in covered trucks by night. No border zone entry permits are issued to civilian non-residents.
2. Construction of an indefinite number of military installations is also being conducted near Drazicky (O50/L91); about one-third of the buildings are underground. The buildings, which appear well constructed, are located in a heavy woods with only two roads leading up to them, and they are closely guarded. The workmen, who are checked in and out of work as well as watched on the job, are only permitted to enter the premises with special police authorization. Civilian inhabitants of the area are even forbidden to discuss the construction.
3. Furthermore, 60 T-34 tanks arrived in the area of Drazicky at the end of February 1951. An additional 100 T-34 tanks are also temporarily located in the caserne at Tabor (O50/M01). All of these tanks are, according to source, well camouflaged and most of them are garaged in special, tunnel-like trenches.
